When Brad Ryan was young, he used to spend a good time with his grandma Joy. Ryan says, "I remember sleepovers at her house when she would teach me to make cookies."

The two became distant when Ryan's parents divorced (离婚), but then ran into each other 10 years later. Realizing how much he liked his grandmother and missed that lost time, he made a plan to spend time with her.

About eight years ago, Ryan was telling Joy about his 2009 hike and many adventures living in the wilderness. "Her eyes softened and then she matter-of-factly said, 'I regret that I didn't get to see more things in life. It would have been nice to see the mountains.' My heart broke for her," Ryan recalls.

It wasn't until a few years later that the two took a trip to the Great Smoke Mountains. After a stressful work schedule. Ryan needed an escape to nature. So he invited his grandma to travel with him. They arrived late at night in the rain with Joy holding the umbrella while Ryan set up the tent. At 85, she had never slept in a tent before, but she climbed 2. 3 miles on a trail, receiving high-fives all the way.

"It was a life-changing trip that provided more purpose than anything I had ever done," Ryan says. "Two years later I set up a GoFundMe called Grandma Joy's Road Trip in the spirit of making up for the lost time and proving that you're never too old to pack in a lifetime of adventure and travel."

In the past four years, they have travelled more than 25,000 miles across 38 states. So far, they've visited 29 of the 61 US national parks, with much of the adventure documented on Instagram.

"You never know what's going to come out of her mouth, and it's usually interesting. I wouldn't want to travel the country with anyone else at this point. Of course we bet tired and have our angry moments. There have been difficult moments that we had to work through, but finally we got to where we needed to be."

B 4. What directly made Ryan start traveling with his grandma?

A. He wanted to teach her how to camp and hike.

B. He felt sorry after hearing about her regrets.

C. He needed a companion to escape his work stress.

D. He hoped to document their trips on social media.

D 5. Which of the following can best describe Grandma Joy?

A. Honest and strict.

B. Determined and sincere.

C. Patient and cautious.

D. Adventurous and humorous.

A 6. What happened during Ryan and his grandma's trip?

A. They got injured sometimes.

B. They made many new friends.

C. They overcame lots of difficulties.

D. They never got annoyed with each other.

B 7. What is the best title for the passage?

A. Grandma Joy's Road Trip

B. Never Too Old for Adventure

C. Traveling the National Parks

D. A Grandson's Promise

Visiting a museum or going on a study tour is a quickly growing social activity, which has significantly increased footfalls at major museums. This situation has prompted many museums to extend their opening hours. What's more, the visitors include not just history and archeology (考古) lovers, but also an increasing number of ordinary people.

All this suggests the cultural tourism field is showing strong recovery (复苏，恢复), which has speeded up the mix of culture and tourism. However, the rapidly rising footfalls present new challenges for the museums, as they have to cater to the visitors' need for special cultural services and take measures to support school research better.

The Suzhou Museum in Jiangsu province offers an example of how museums can adapt to（调整）deal with the onrush of visitors. Firstly, the museums should expand their roles beyond the traditional field of education and research, and join the local tourism area. In 2007, the Suzhou Museum conducted a survey of visitors through a questionnaire, which showed that most of the visitors were young well-educated people who were very active on social media. And social media users influence people's travel habits or decisions, giving rise to popular things such as "city walks". Based on this insight, the museum published a pocketbook providing information on both its collections and local tourist spots in Suzhou.

Second, the application of digital technology can improve changes in the cultural area. Some museums have also found new ways of interacting with online visitors. 3D virtual modeling and digitalized exhibitions can give visitors the chance to explore museums from a distance.

Third, there is a growing trend of cross-border integration (融合) of cultural and educational resources. Politics encourages students to visit museums, improving their historical knowledge through school-related lessons.

Last but not least, museums must also cater to elderly visitors, who make up over 20% of China's population. The Suzhou Museum carried out a survey of more than 800 people aged 60 or above through questionnaires and interviews last year to understand their preferences and develop age-friendly services. These include making places easy to reach, providing efficient medical services, and displaying artworks in ways that reduce physical effort for all visitors.

Only by paying attention to the real needs of the people can museums provide better cultural offerings and services.

A

8. What does the underlined phrase "cater to" in paragraph 2 mean?

A. Satisfy. B. Afford. C. Support. D. Help.

D

9. Who are likely to visit museums most according to the survey conducted in 2007?

A. Art and photography fans.

B. History and archeology lovers.

C. International exchange students.

D. Young, well-educated social media users.

C

10. How did the Suzhou Museum adapt to the increase in visitors?

A. By extending opening hours. B. By meeting different requirements.

C. By focusing on academic research. D. By providing more educational resources.

11. What's the purpose of this passage?

A. To develop tourism in Jiangsu province.

B. To describe the present state of museums.

C. To discuss the challenges faced by museums.

D. To explain how museums rise to the challenges.

D

Buying something that you are going to share with another person creates greater anxiety than buying something just for yourself or buying a gift for someone, according to a new study. The study also found that shopping for things you will share lowers your confidence in your ability to choose suitable items (物品). The study, which has been published in the Journal of Marketing Research, looked at three kinds of shopping experience: buying something for yourself, buying a gift for someone and buying something for shared use.

Over 2,000 people were asked to measure (测量) their levels of anxiety for these three experiences in different shopping situations, such as choosing healthy drinks for a meeting, snacks for a movie or wine for a party, as well as more difficult decisions such as choosing travel activities. The results showed that buying something that will be shared causes obviously more anxiety than either shopping for yourself or shopping for a gift.

The researchers found that when shoppers need to consider both their own and other people's preferences, they feel an increased sense of responsibility, and worry more about not making the right choices. This anxiety is felt especially when the other person's preferences aren't known, or if they are expected to be different from their own. One of the researchers, Margaret Campbell, told Phys. org that the level of anxiety is not related to how difficult the shopper's decision is, but to the "added emotional weight of responsibility."

The researchers said trying to learn as much as you can about the other person's preferences can help reduce your anxiety and increase your confidence as the shopper. However, this still doesn't work if the other person's preferences are different from your own!

Also, if a shopper asks you what your preferences are, saying you don't care, or, "Get whatever you like," is not a helpful answer and will actually increase the shopper's anxiety. So it's better to give a more considered answer.

12. What is the main finding of the study?

A. Shopping reduces people's anxiety.

B. Anxiety weakens the ability to choose gifts.

C. Anxiety leads people to choose right items.

D. Shopping to share causes the most anxiety.

13. How did the researchers carry out the study?

A. By tracking shopping anxiety sources.

B. By assessing anxiety levels of shopping types.

C. By comparing shopping habits of different groups.

D. By testing shopping preferences for certain items.

14. What mainly caused the anxiety about shopping for shared use?

A. The shared preferences.

B. The duty to meet both sides.

C. The uncertainty of the results.

D. The difficulty in making choices.

15. Which answer might be preferred when buying shared items?

A. "We can decide when we see what's on sale."

B. "I often prefer tea, but juice would also work."

C. "I'd prefer a drink without sugar, like green tea."

D. "You have good taste — I'll like whatever you pick."

二、七选五（共 5 小题，每小题 2.5 分，满分 12.5 分）

阅读下面短文，从短文后的选项中选出可以填入空白处的最佳选项。选项中有两项为多余选项

With the increasing popularity of social websites and personal online blogs, the act of oversharing has become more common. ___16___ Telling a co-worker you don't want a piece of birthday cake may be acceptable, but adding the fact you're on a diet to lose 50 pounds would be oversharing. Here are some reasons that lead to oversharing.

Some oversharing is the result of a poorly developed social filter (过滤器) or "shut up button." A mother may feel comfortable oversharing details of the birthing process with co-workers, for example, not realizing she is making others feel uncomfortable. ___17___

Sometimes, oversharing is an attempt to break the ice or build closeness by sharing small embarrassing moments. ___18___ However, there are still some lines which should not be crossed. For example, an employer should not share personal details with an employee, because their relationship includes a level of respect for the employer's authority (权威) . Oversharing can in turn do harm to their relation.

___19___ Those with few friends may see co-workers or strangers as family, sharing more than proper. While it may not be acceptable to tell too much information to strangers, it may feel acceptable to overshare with co-workers at lunch or the friendly cashier at a local restaurant. Some people feel a level of closeness which does not actually exist, but it is not real at all.

___20___ We should avoid sharing too much with those who are not expecting it.

A. Oversharing results from a need for attention.

B. Another cause for oversharing is having no close friends.

C. This form of oversharing may have some immediate benefits.

D. Some people may not realize the effect of their oversharing on others.

E. While some oversharing is socially acceptable, it's wise to think twice.

F. Oversharing means sharing too much personal information with other people.

G. Once it happens, it becomes difficult to erase those images from others' minds.
